

WIFE OF REMUS HAD PLANNED TO SECURE DIVORCE

Notes Obtained by News Service Are Many

MOTHER IS WORRIED

Eleven Tentatively Accepted Jurors Are Now In The Box

By James L. Kilgallen
(I. N. S. Staff Correspondent)
COURT HOUSE, Cincinnati, Nov. 16.—Correspondence passing between George Remus, on trial for murder in Criminal Court, of his wife, Imogene, whom he shot and killed on October 6, last, was obtained exclusively by International News Service today, as the third day of the trial opened.

Eleven tentatively accepted jurors were in the box this morning and the tedious task of obtaining the jury was resumed.

The following note disclosed to Remus, then a prisoner in the Atlanta Federal Penitentiary, that his wife was planning to divorce him. It was written in pencil by Mrs. Remus on a Western Union blank and read as follows:

"George:
"After our conversation today, it is very plain that you have lost confidence in me, and as you told me to go ahead and file, think I will follow your advice. It at any time I can assist you please let me know.
"My heart weighs too heavy to say any more.
(Signed)
"Imo."

A copy of this communication was obtained today and shown to Remus as he entered court. He admitted he had received the above note following his last meeting with Mrs. Remus at the Atlanta Penitentiary.

"I could not understand the meaning of the note," said Remus. "It was my first intimation from her that she was planning to leave me. She visited me the very morning I received this communication. We held a long conversation in Warden Shook's office. She had kissed me goodbye and we had parted, as I thought, in excellent spirits.

"That woman, however, as I see it now, left this note at the Penitentiary to be delivered to me after she left. I immediately attempted to decipher it, but did not understand its real meaning until I was notified that she had filed suit for divorce at Cincinnati the next day."

CINCINNATI, Ohio, Nov. 16.—"Every night I pray for my son—pray that he will not have to die in the electric chair. I have placed my trust in God."

Mrs. Frank Remus, the grey-haired 78-year-old mother of George Remus, who is on trial for the murder of his wife, Imogene, whom he shot and killed in Eden Park, Cincinnati, on October 6, last, made this statement in broken accents to International News Service in an exclusive interview today.

She has come from Chicago to be near her son, now battling in court to escape the death penalty. She is staying in the thirty-room mansion owned by Remus that he used to call his "dream house" when he and the woman he killed lived in splendor there. Nearly every room in the place is now bare, having been stripped of all its furnishings by Mrs. Remus when Remus was in jail. Even the alabaster lions in front of the home were removed.

"I am a sad mother, for I am afraid that maybe everything will not come out all right for my boy, although he assures me that it will," said Mrs. Remus. "He was such a good boy; he always helped me and he was so ambitious.

"My husband had rheumatism for years and could not work, but George always took care of us. He worked hard in the drug store in Chicago by day, studied at night, and became an optician. Then he studied law and I was so proud when he was admitted to the bar."

Mrs. Remus did not seem to know much about her son's turning from the law to engage in bootlegging on a stupendous scale, but she did know about his married life.

"His first wife was a good woman," she said, "but his second wife made him her slave. And see how she took everything from this house, the paintings from the wall, the fixtures, the statues, everything."

Tears came into Mrs. Remus' eyes as she told of having visited her son—in jail—and of trying to cheer her up.

"To think," she cried, "that he—such a fine son, who was so good to me—in such a place."

Man In Critical Condition Following Auto Accident

Police and physicians last night were endeavoring to locate relatives or friends of Frank Reed, 38 years old, who was in a critical and semi-conscious condition at St. Francis Hospital, after being struck by an automobile on the Lincoln Highway, outside of Morrisville, early last evening.

Although doctors at the hospital succeeded in obtaining the man's name and age, he was unable to tell his address. He is suffering from a possible fracture of the skull, concussion of the brain, severe lacerations of the scalp and cuts and bruises. Physicians fear for his recovery.

When picked up from the highway by the driver of the machine which struck him, the man was unconscious. He regained his senses on the way to Trenton but after being admitted to the hospital he lapsed into a semi-conscious state.

According to Harold L. Gregory, of 2805 C Street, Philadelphia, driver of the automobile, Reed stepped out of a dark road onto the Lincoln Highway in the path of the machine.

Gregory was returning to Philadelphia after a day of gunning and was accompanied by Thomas Knight, of 3145 Gaul street, Philadelphia, who aided in the removal of the victim to the hospital. The two men surrendered to police and the driver is being held on a technical charge of atrocious assault and battery, to await the outcome of the man's injuries.

CITY APPROPRIATES SUM TO ASSIST ITS TRAVELERS

Vandergrift To Provide Means For Directing Visiting Travellers

OTHER STATE ITEMS

VANDEGRIFT, Pa., Nov. 16 (I.N.S.)—Vandergrift, "The City of Windy Streets," is taking steps to lessen the troubles of visitors.

Strangers find themselves hopelessly lost in the labyrinth of highways that wind through the broken hills of Vandergrift. The streets of the town, running in circles, doubling back and describing arcs, curves and corkscrew dips, have long been the anathema to travelers who have wandered aimlessly, only to find themselves back where they started.

Now the Kiwanis, the Chamber of Commerce and the Town Council have decided to remedy the situation, and $800 has been appropriated to be used in erecting signs to guide visitors.

HARRISBURG, Nov. 16 (I.N.S.)—Hunters who killed grouse by the score to feed their dogs was cited today by John B. Truman, executive secretary of the state game commission as an instance of how flagrant some violations of the game laws are and also the need of co-operation by sportsmen who observe the laws.

The commission has been compelled to deal constantly with professional hunters who kill game both in and out of season to sell in city markets. The case near North Bend where four hunters were fined for killing grouse to feed to their five dogs was the first of its kind on record, Truman said.

Grouse, known to hunters as the "King of Game Birds" are rapidly disappearing from the state not only because of illegal shooting but also on account of their susceptibility to disease. Each season it has been necessary to close parts of the state to grouse shooting because of their scarcity.

Men of good position and character in their home communities who once in the woods cast aside all respect for law and consideration of other sportsmen are responsible for much of the present violations, Truman said.

Anxiety of many so-called sportsmen to buy what they cannot kill is the cause of many "natives" of the game country, finding themselves in trouble, Truman added.

"Every sportsman of the state should be alert to apprehend unscrupulous hunters as a protection to his own sport," Truman asserted.

KANE, Pa., Nov. 16 (I.N.S.)—Despite his 86 years of age, William O'Connor, of this city, is one of McKean County's most ambitious hunters. Bagging bears appeals to him most. He prides himself on his knowledge of woodlore learned from the last of the old Indian hunters in this section.

WAYNESBORO, Pa., Nov. 16 (I.N.S.)—Republicans claim that this county, a recognized Democratic stronghold in this rock-ribbed Republican state since the days of Andrew Jackson, is passing into the control of the G. O. P. At the recent election Frank R. Hill, Republican, was elected county treasurer by a 2,000 majority over J. C. Cole, who had the combined support of all the Democratic factions.

NEEDLEWORK GUILD AGAIN GOES OVER THE TOP IN COLLECTION OF GARMENTS FOR THE NEEDY POOR

Directors Collected 393 More Articles Than Were Donated Last Year — Total Number of Garments Contributed Was 4,423 — To Form Junior Branch

With a marked advance in the number of new garments collected to be distributed among the poor in many localities, the Bristol Branch of the Needlework Guild of America completed another successful year of work, marking same by the exhibition of garments in the Community House, here, yesterday afternoon.

Two speakers were present for the occasion, giving to the workers and others interested an idea as to just where and how the articles are distributed; and radiating enthusiasm that should be an incentive for greater effort.

Miss Linda Nilsson, executive secretary of the Philadelphia Day Nursery Association, was introduced by Mrs. Henry E. Ancker, president of the Guild, and because of her intense enthusiasm for work among the unfortunate individuals of the city of Philadelphia, thrilled the group with accounts of everyday life at the nurseries.

"In Philadelphia and all our large cities there is real poverty," she explained. "In the tiny quarters of many families, the mother wonders as she wipes the dust off the window pane, in order to let in a little sunshine, just where the next day's food is coming from for her brood.

"I have in mind one poor mother, who had not been privileged to buy a new coat, a new dress or hat since she had been married, and that was for a period of 33 years. But through it all she was cheerful. And when through the help of those interested in her case, she was able to procure a new coat, even though a cheap one, she felt like a millionaire. There are hundreds of such cases.

"You can have no sense of conception as to what ownership of these new garments will mean," said Miss Nilsson, glancing at the tables piled high with underclothing, girls' dresses, boys' suits, towels, bed linen, etc. "Self-respect is one of the fundamentals of human beings."

Then she continued to tell of the pride manifested by birds and flowers, remarking that it is just as natural for the poor folk of the world to desire pretty things of warmth as it is for those in better circumstances to desire tasty food and good times.

"You in your work contribute to that particular stream of human necessity," she addressed the Guild members. "You are concerned with providing excellent garments of quality and warmth that will last. I wish you could know and see what happens when the bags and boxes arrive at the day nurseries and the things fall out. The joy is beyond description as the tots receive the pieces of clothing upon which you have worked faithfully and hard."

On behalf of the day nurseries which have received many garments through the various branches of the Guild, Miss Nilsson said, "We thank you from the bottom of our hearts." During her discourse this social worker remarked that 115,000 garments were received by the organization of which she is secretary last year, and stated that every day of the Bristol Guild, Mrs. Ancker, told with what joy she was able to announce that another one of her dreams is coming true. "We are going to have a Junior Section of the Guild, and I just know the girls will succeed."

Mrs. Arthur E. Rowe, president of the Torresdale Branch of the Needlework Guild, was then called upon to tell of the work of the Juniors in Torresdale. "I know you are desirous of starting a junior branch, and all I can tell you about such is to relate just what we have been doing," she mentioned the fact that Torresdale is proud of its 50 junior directors, who have jointly completed 36 baby baskets. "After you get the Juniors interested they will just carry on," she added.

Mrs. Howe brought one of the completed baskets or layettes to the meeting to show the group, stating that each contains about 51 pieces. She stated that the girls are so interested in making clothing for babies, and their interest is held more readily by having a definite object in view, or a certain amount to finish, similar to the baskets.

Mrs. Minot J. Hill and Mrs. William J. Betz have been appointed in charge of the Junior section for Bristol, and a definite line of work will be mapped out within a short time.

In the display of garments that graced the long tables, and hung from lines, there were 4,423 articles, a gain of 393 over last year's array. Those who had their names among the first on the honor roll were: Mrs. Clifford L. Anderson, 419; Miss Esther Lawrence, 288; Mrs. Fred Kring, 272; Mrs. Henry E. Ancker, 256.

A fine display of articles of clothing completed by the sewing committee was in evidence; as well as 100 knitted caps, of all colors, which had been executed by Mrs. Talulah Downing, a former chairman of the sewing committee.

The work of the high school students was referred to, 65 dresses having been completed by the girls. The local chapter of the Eastern Star had 230 articles in its donation.

Interest in the layettes included in the collection was keen, the baskets numbering 13. Each of these white baskets daintily trimmed, was complete with undergarments, dresses, saques, bonnets, powder, soap, rattles, etc.

Ira Treat Illegally Married South Langhorne Girl Last May

MUST AID DEPENDENTS

DOYLESTOWN, Nov. 16.—Judge Samuel E. Shull, of Stroudsburg, yesterday paroled Ira Treat, son of a New Jersey alderman, who has been serving a sentence in the Bucks County Prison for bigamy.

Treat was sentenced on May 2, 1927, to serve from one to two years in the county prison. He pleaded guilty to marrying Miss Elizabeth Froesch, of South Langhorne, when he had a wife and child living at Cape May Court House, N. J.

The petition for parole was presented by John L. DuBois, of this place, attorney for Treat. He has served four months of his sentence. The petition set forth that Treat has a wife and child dependent upon him for his support.

Judge Shull also granted a parole in the application made in behalf of John H. Sticksels, of Philadelphia, who pleaded guilty on September 15 to a charge of operating an automobile while drunk. Sticksels was sentenced to three months in the Bucks County Prison and was fined $200 and costs. The parole petition was presented by John Leslie Kilcoyne, of Bristol. Sticksels is married and has a wife and mother dependent upon him for support, he told the Court.

FIRE APPARATUS GIVEN FINAL OFFICIAL TEST

Two Pumpers Exceed Rated Capacity in Final Test Here

ALL EQUIPMENT IS O. K.

The 500 gallon pump and the 750 gallon pump which is to be part of the equipment of the Bristol Consolidated Fire Department, were officially tested yesterday by Thomas P. Dwyer, engineer of the Philadelphia Suburban Underwriters.

The 500 gallon pump is mounted on the city service ladder truck and developed slightly less than 600 gallons per minute at 120 pounds pump pressure.

Equipped with a 100-gallon booster tank the 750 gallon pump developed 750 gallons per minute.

The 750 gallon pump was tested in a way similar to the test given the 1,000 gallon pump on November 3rd, with lines of hose running to the heavy duty combination wagon and the stream being thrown through the monitor pipe which is mounted on it.

The demonstration of the booster tank with a small line of hose carrying a one-half inch tip was of great interest to the spectators, gathered about the Mill street wharf, where the tests were conducted.

All of the new apparatus has now been tested by the Underwriters and passed to their satisfaction.

Representatives of the Athens-Fox will remain here at the new fire station for some weeks to come, prepared to instruct sufficient men to drive and operate the various pieces of apparatus.

BATTALION CHIEF GIVES TALK ON FIRE FIGHTING

William Simmler, of Central Station, Phila., Makes An Interesting Address

EXPLAINS FORMATION

Suggests Three Companies In New Department Being Organized

Tentative Organization For New Fire Dep't

Battalion Chief William Simmler, Central City Station, Philadelphia, in an address to members of Bristol Consolidated Fire Department, last night, suggested a tentative form of organization for the new department.

It was as follows:
Department Officers
Chief, first assistant chief, second assistant chief.
Company Officers
Engine Co. No. 1—Captain; first lieutenant; second lieutenant; at least three drivers.
Engine Co. No. 2—Captain; first lieutenant; second lieutenant; at least three drivers.
Ladder Co. No. 1—Captain; first lieutenant; second lieutenant; at least three drivers.
Each company to have as many volunteer active firemen as can be properly commanded.

A fire drill school will open next Monday night at 7:45 and meet weekly. Instructions to be given by Battalion Chief Simmler.

Another enthusiastic meeting of Bristol Consolidated Fire Department was held last night in the community house, Dorrance and Cedar streets, and over 100 men listened attentively for two hours to a discussion of the subjects of "Fire Defense" and "Fire Prevention."

Chief Burgess, Clifford L. Anderson, president of the new company, presided and the first speaker introduced was Joseph R. Grundy, who took as his topic "Fire Prevention."

Mr. Grundy dwelt at length on the value of fire prevention and periodic inspections so as to eliminate fire hazards.

C. E. Wood and L. A. Cheppelle, representatives of Athens-Fox Fire Engine Company, both explained the new fire fighting equipment which the new department is to have. They gave it as their opinion that no other town comparable with Bristol had such a "lay-out" in the way of equipment as Bristol now possesses. "I have been in many towns and cities," said Mr. Wood and never have I seen anything like it."

Director of Public Safety George Elliott, of Philadelphia, sent Battalion Chief William Simmler, of the Philadelphia Department here, to speak to the assembly.

Chief Simmler, although small of stature, measuring five feet six inches, demonstrated to the audience that he knew the business of fire fighting from "A" to "Z." "I have been in the department many years," he said. "I am at the central station and already this year have had over 600 fires."

The speaker wore his uniform and prefaced his remarks by stating that he had spent most of the day in Bristol making a survey of the town. "I find that you can stand on every corner in your town and see a fire alarm box. I have been in most every town in eastern Pennsylvania and most of those in New Jersey, and I have never seen the 'lay-out' that you have here. Your fire station, that splendid apparatus, your natural advantages for water supply, all give you excellent facilities for fire fighting. All that you now require is organization."

"I would suggest that in organizing you select capable men for your officers such as a chief, and at least two deputies and a captain, first and second lieutenants and at least three drivers for each company.
"Everything in your equipment as I see it is of the very latest. You have the very best hose and the couplings have rocker lugs which are the best.
"Remember that you must conserve property and do not apply the water until you feel the 'red'.
"You must have drills. Every city in the United States today has a drill school. We have one in Philadelphia and do not take our hats off to any school, not even New York. I personally, would be willing to come and start your drill classes and bring some of the other boys along with me. Now you fellows who are willing to drill should volunteer for this training."

The Chief answered many questions asked by the men and suggested that the new department should consist of three companies—two companies to consist of a pumper and combination wagon each and the third company to be a ladder or truck company.

"With your system of alarm here it is not necessary for all of you men to go to the fire station when the alarm is sounded. When it hits off go to (Continued on Page Four)

SERAGLIO

Though Arabia is a backward country imbued with the fundamentalistic idea that all that is old is sacred and all that is new is profane, she has a ruler who is showing symptoms of ultra-modernism.

Since he must, out of personal preference or respect for the custom of his fathers, have more than one wife, he has ordered a seraglio on wheels—a train of large, closed automobiles capable of carrying his harem abroad with him.

Though this is a common thing in this country it is, nevertheless, quite modern. His Arabian Highness no doubt got the idea from the "seraglio sedans" of the sheiks which course the streets and highways and park in dark lanes in Bristol and its environs.

Since no other man is permitted to gaze upon the faces of the king's wives, the traveling seraglio will be windowless, carrying to the logical extreme the practice of American sheiks to foil, with car shades or blinds, the vulgar gaze of the curious. The Arabian potentate has given the boy friends an idea in return for the one he borrowed from them.

Now the Western world waits with bated breath to see if the Eastern monarch has the courage of his modernist convictions. If he is a true dyed-in-the-wool modern, a cable dispatch will soon bring the news that his favorite walked home from a ride or that the ruling member of his seraglio was beheaded for rear-seat driving.

It may be that His Omnipotence has put his foot in it. The automobile helped the American girl and wife to assert her independence, either by walking home or rear-seat driving, and it may do the same for the women of Arabia.

PHILIPPINE PROBLEM

While the advocacy of a new civil bureau to supervise administration of America's insular possessions seemingly covers all territories now run by the war and navy departments, it is the Philippines which would be most strikingly affected thereby. Hawaii, as a territory, would be untouched by the change and, excepting Porto Rico, all the other dependencies are small in size and population. The Canal Zone, it is to be expected, would preserve its present character of a military reservation under the war department.

But for the Philippines the change would be of manifest importance. It would remove the obvious inconsistency of maintaining under military control a possession to which the United States has steadfastly promised a progressive furtherance of self-government. It would eliminate one of the most cogent of Filipino grievances by ending the rather tactless authority of the group of army officers serving under the governor general. And it would bring the theory of Philippine government in line with the facts.

The archipelago is no longer conquered territory needing military overlordship, but a rich and peaceful dependency in which the problems are those of civil administration and economic development. Civil officers can serve the needs of the country as well if not better than military officers.

The public is twelve years old mentally, according to a Chicago physician. After all these years of suffering, doctor?

SYNOPSIS

In the ancient university town of Amiens, in old France, the Chevalier Fabien des Grieux, a poetic youth, as handsome as good, awaits the Paris coach which will carry him to St. Sulpice, where he will complete his training for the priesthood. Meanwhile, on the lumbering diligence as it nears Amiens, rides a beautiful young orphan, Manon Lescaut, being taken to a convent by her only relative, a brother in the Guards, who doesn't want to be bothered with her. Another passenger, the Comte de Ravoire, a connoisseur of women, furtively watches her.

In his avarice and imagination the Comte was picturing how doubly magnificent she would be if his money was sent out to bring in the luxuries her beauty deserved. As his eyes traveled back to Manon's lap he saw that she was having difficulty in keeping her small pet kitten in its basket.

"Ah, an interesting situation," thought the Comte. "Neither the charming mistress nor her pet relish confinement—and the convent will be just as narrow for the young lady as the basket is for the kitten—I wonder!"

And it was just at this moment that Manon's kitten gave a leap for freedom and landed on Comte De Ravoire's lap!

The Comte straightened up and grasped the little animal in his long nervous fingers, as if determined to keep in his power, at least for a moment, something that belonged to Manon. With more intimacy than the occasion demanded the Comte smiled straight into her eyes and said, "I am afraid your pet does not want to be hidden away, and she is right

Comte to keep his hands there. However, before she could place the basket on the floor the Comte had greedily touched her hands, under pretense of helping fasten the lid on the basket.

Quickly Manon turned away without again looking at the wealthy traveler. Nervously resting her chin in her hand she gazed out of the diligence window toward the convent to which she was going. A great flock of light colored pigeons were circling around and through the highest belfry towers, and as their wings flashed like silver in the sunshine, Manon decided that it would not be so bad, after all, to leave—men—and live within the peaceful confines of the convent walls.

All of this time Andre Lescaut was awakening to the new and unlooked for possibilities in his sister's unconscious power to attract men. Unless there was some immediate advantage in being polite, he was extremely rude. Lescaut was without the slightest principle of honor. By inclination and skill he was a professional, gentleman gambler—a gay blade when luck ran high, but desperate and sullen when the odds were against him, as they had been lately. Money was as essential to his existence as air, and sometimes just as easy to get. At that time he had immediate use for more gold than the gaming tables would let him make while the need was so pressing.

Lescaut's eyes went to his little when it means that she would be out of your hands and sight."

"Oh, fit does not mind," replied Manon with a timid little smile, not in the least understanding the Comte's hidden meaning.

However, her brother heard and slowly opened his lazy eyes to take in the little scene. As he noted the wealthy man's interest in his sister, Lescaut's bored manner faded away. A half finished yawn was forgotten. The seat no longer felt uncomfortable. Wriggling to an upright position he watched without appearing to do so.

"Permit me to help you with your troublesome charge," offered the Comte, as he returned the kitten to Manon's lap. But the little feline was not pleased at being handled by a stranger and arching her back she curled up her little pink lip at the Comte—as if to say, "Hands Off!"

"Fit, dear, that is not one bit polite," admonished Manon, looking up apologetically at the Comte; but her smile faded away when she saw something in his face that she did not like, something that made her drop her gaze and devote all her attention to restoring the kitten to its basket.

No one had ever looked at Manon like that before. It seemed as though the man had turned his eyes almost inside out—they bulged, stared, blinked and watered. It was his blue eyes that Manon suddenly decided that there was something about this man that filled her with terror—and she could not look at him again. But there he was holding the basket on her lap, his hands pressing unnecessarily against her, waiting for the pet to be looked away. She looked appealingly at her brother, but if he saw her distress he gave no sign; he only smiled and nodded his head in approval. Manon was seized with a desire to strike the man's hands away from her; yet her brother was not annoyed, so she decided it would be foolish and rude as the Comte seemed to be only offering help.

Hastily, and at the same time gently, she forced her kitten into the basket, then lifted it quickly from her knees so there would no longer be any necessity for the sister's face and he watched her with growing interest, narrowed lids and a lascivious expression. Her flower like face, a little saddened, made him ask out of curiosity rather than love:

"Why so melancholy, little one?"

"It is almost time for us to part and I dislike being left alone—I mean that it makes me sad."

"So—you dislike being left alone, oh? Well, what would you?" But instead of looking at Manon, Lescaut quickly stole a glance at Comte De Ravoire and really asked the question of him.

It was just a flash of understanding between two men of the world in the presence of a young girl who did not grasp the situation at all. But the one look that darted between the greedy and unscrupulous brother and the licentious banker planted a thought that was destined to cause great adventure and untold heartaches.

CHAPTER II

Comte De Ravoire acknowledged Lescaut's question by slowly nodding his head and sensuously stroking his lips. Lescaut suddenly straightened up. He was no longer bored! His lips formed into a whistle and he almost let it out in his excitement.

Here he was just on the ace of throwing away his most valuable stake! His little sister—Manon—now had a new value for him. He looked at her critically and with an awakened interest. He smiled to himself as he watched the Comte devouring her with his eyes; a charming and perhaps profitable little drama of which Manon was wholly innocent.

Manon suddenly realized that her brother was staring at her. Glancing up she caught his eye and he quickly changed his expression. She reached over and trustfully nestled her hand in her brother's with a sigh of contentment.

"Well, little one, if you hate to leave me as much as that—how would you like to spend the night in the inn?" asked Lescaut. "We can have dinner and breakfast together before time to retire to the convent."

BRITISH WITHDRAW TEAMS FROM OLYMPIC

By Davis J. Walsh
I. N. S. Sports Editor
NEW YORK, Nov. 16.—Complete withdrawal of all of Great Britain's athletic teams from the Olympic games at Amsterdam some six months hence was a strong possibility today, according to advices received from London. The British, it seems, have become rigidly opposed to the practice, in vogue on the other side, of payment of sums of money to competing soccer players for so called "broken time" during the games and are inclined to make their withdrawal stand as an official expression of their displeasure.

The official view, as expressed by the British Olympic Association today, was that the status of their own athletes would be effected by competition with Europeans who, in the opinion of the English were professedly specializing themselves and that they would not be justified in engaging in such an association. This view was expressed upon receipt of information from Lausanne that the executive committee of the International Olympic Association had voted to continue the policy of permitting "broken time" payments during the next games.

That the British threat is no idle one may be judged from the fact that the English soccer football team was withdrawn from the 1924 games in Paris. However, to a man on a limb, it would appear that the scratching of an entire entry list just because your soccer men may feel themselves contaminated by association with "broken time" amateurs is going rather far and possibly the British will come to feel that way about it because the mobilization at Amsterdam begins.

If they did decide to turn up absent, it would mean that the United States would be the only English-speaking team at the games, unless Canada, Australia and South Africa decided to go it alone. It also would mean that three defending champions, Harold Abrahams in the 100 metre dash; Eric Liddell in the 400 metre run and Douglas Lowe in the 800 metre event, would not be among those present, to say nothing of Stallard, star middle distance runner, and Lord Burghley, a leading hurdler.

A British withdrawal, in part or in toto, is not desirable from any standpoint and, therefore, it is to be assumed that it will not be permitted to occur.

The "broken time" proposition has its antagonists and pro-antagonists, the latter hailing from continental Europe and the former being found in England and the United States. We, however, take a more passive view of the situation than do the British.

The plan, at that, has its points but, as the fellow said, so has a barbed wire fence. Anyhow, it helps to take care of the families of artisans and others whose wages stop automatically when the husband and father hies him away to the field of honor, or something. While he is gone, at least part of his wages is paid, thus removing an unnatural burden from his manly shoulders.

Of course, that, strictly speaking, is not quite the way for a gentleman amateur or an amateur gentleman to act. And what of it, if at all?

Thirty Persons Listed As 'Missing' in Pittsburgh Blast

PITTSBURGH, Nov. 16 (I.N.S.)—With thirty persons still listed today as "missing" as a result of the gas tank explosion here Monday, possibility arose that the total death toll may exceed fifty. Already 26 are known dead, others are expected to succumb to their injuries and of the missing, many are believed lying dead beneath tons of debris.

The cellar of the Pittsburgh Clay Pot Company, now a mass of tangled wreckage, may yield many of the thirty missing men. The plant employed 117 who were at work when the nearby tank of the Equitable Gas Company let go its terrific blast. Several days will be required to penetrate to the bottom of the cellar. Nearly a hundred of the total of 509 injured were still confined to hospitals today. A definite check had placed the number of ruined homes and factories at 200 and the total property damage at many millions.

Four-Speed Transmission On Chevrolet Trucks

In order to enlarge the field of service of the trucks manufactured by the Chevrolet Motor Company, Sidney Corbett, manager of the Commercial Car Division, today announced that a four speed transmission is now available for all Chevrolet one-ton types.

This new transmission, Mr. Corbett said, will provide 107 per cent. greater application of engine power than the regularly equipped three speed transmission, and is particularly adapted to such work as pulling out of ploughed fields, sand pits, and similar heavy duty service. Provision also is made in it, Mr. Corbett said, for a power take-off so that the power from the engine may be applied to various devices such as hydraulic hoist, pressure units for sprayers, pumps, etc.

"Gear reductions in the three higher speeds of the new transmission," he said, "are approximately the same as in the standard three-speed transmission, the extra fourth speed providing a reduction 107 per cent. greater than in the standard transmission. The new type operates and shifts the same as the standard, except for an auxiliary attachment to the shift lever which throws the fourth speed into gear.

"The new product was developed by Chevrolet engineers and perfected on General Motors proving grounds. It is available through the Chevrolet dealer organization at a cost of $65 installed."

THE NEW ERA IN TELEPHONE COMMUNICATION

THEY STUDY THE HUMAN VOICE

TWO thousand people — scientists, mathematicians, technicians and their assistants — in the Bell Telephone Laboratories are constantly studying the human voice.

They study methods and materials for projecting it over a wire or through the air.

They study your telephone service — and how to make it better.

Your present-day service has been developed in this greatest industrial laboratory in the world. Thousands of other experts are constantly studying improvements in operating methods and practices.

Years of ceaseless effort have brought the whole range of your telephone service to its present high standard.

The developments in out-of-town service to nearby points, and the high speed service on calls to more distant points—

These are evidences of the new era which constant research and study have brought to telephone communication.
